These studies make a companion to Alessandro Perosa's edition (1960) of pagine scelte from the Zibaldone of Giovanni Rucellai (1403-1481). The Zibaldone was intended as a guide to Rucellai's two sons in the conduct of their lives and is by turns family history, record of things done and seen, book of commercial management, chronicle of artistic patronage, Florentine history, and the Rucellai palace by a group of well-known scholars of Early Renaissance Florentine history, art, and architecture is a welcome event. The project has a long history. Alessandro Perosa published Giovanni Rucellai's celebrated Zibaldone in 1960.8 Building on this foundation, Rudolph Wittkower planned a study of the Rucellai palace and its patron.

Giovanni Rucellai, a major patron of art and architecture in fifteenth-century Florence, paid Leon Battista Alberti to construct the Palazzo Rucellai and the façade of Santa Maria Novella, both high – profile and extremely costly undertakings. In his personal memoir, he talks about his motivations for these and other commissions, noting that “All the above-mentioned things have given and give me the greatest satisfaction and pleasure, because in part they serve the honor of God as well ...
